

1. They showed me a lot of things, but the biggest one was that what they are going through is not easy. As someone who has had access to school wherever I go, and have been taught that schooling is a necessity in one's life. Their not being able to get their hands on basic things needed for schooling, such as notebooks, was really hard to see and made me feel very sad, but also very grateful for the life I live. Even though they had these barriers, they never gave up and worked for everything they got, even though there are people around them who make more money and are able to get more than they do. Everyone was working very hard to get everything they have in life, and some people are just unable to get more than others, but this was a good way to make sure that everyone has a fighting chance when it comes to schooling and being able to get an education.
2. The big one for me was donating the clothing. The night before class, I was looking through my closet to see what I could give away and realized that I had so many clothes that I no longer wear and were collecting dust, when someone else needed them. It made me sit back and think to myself how selfish it is to have all these things when, in reality, I don't need them. It also made me think about how many other people do it out there without even realizing it. It helped me understand that there will always be those in need, and we need to stand behind them if we want to see any changes in the coming years. Although those changes might not affect everyone, changing 1 person's life every day for the rest of the time you live will be a lot of people, and you never know how much that will mean to someone in the future.
3. Study 3 resonated with me the most because AI has especially become a product of everyday use, I mean, you can look it up on Google, and 30 different websites with AI will pop up. My stance on AI is different than most people, as I think that we shouldn't be using AI in our everyday lives, as it will affect us much more than we think in the future. I think that this was good because the more people who see the data out there is the higher the chance that they will change their opinions in a way that is better for everyone. People often do things without understanding the risks of something, but this is a good way to force people into seeing the risks that come with AI use. If these risks are properly seen and dealt with, they could save people from losing jobs, being shown false information, and so much more.

4. It did both in challenging my belief and confirming it because I was naive in thinking that everyone contributed, and it was easy for people were able to succeed when it came to job searching or getting supplies for school however, it challenged my belief because it shows how hard it is even if everyone does contribute. Although if everyone contributes and works hard, then the people will be able to succeed in what they are working for in life, it isn't as easy as I thought it would be. The strengths I see in this work are the fact that everyone is coming together for the better of someone else. It speaks to the bright side of humanity, showing that we are willing to work for the benefit of others. I don't think there are any limitations, I think that we can take this to the moon as long as we continue to adapt and change the program to help everyone in need.
5. This has definitely changed my goals in a big way, and that being that I want to take time and help people who are in need. We don't realize it until we are shown, but we have a lot more than we need to survive, and if you have a chance to help someone who might not be as fortunate as you, then you need to take that opportunity. It gives me another purpose in this world, and that is to be able to help those in need, and it makes me go to sleep happy at night knowing I helped someone, even if it was in a very little way, you just feel better about yourself. In the future, I plan on trying to help someone or donate something every week just to do my part when it comes to helping someone less fortunate than me. Something that I hope to keep is my passion for this; it is definitely something that is needed if you want to stay on the path of helping people. A way that I plan on helping the less fortunate is working at a food pantry near me once a week. They are always looking for volunteers, and it is a simple yet effective way to help someone.
